Making a will

If you care about what will happen to your money and possessions after you die, making a will is vital.

If you have substantial wealth, making a will is especially important. But even if your assets are more modest, a will can ensure your money and belongings go to those you wish to benefit. By making a will you can also make specific arrangements regarding your personal belongings, pets and funeral.

If you have children you can stipulate in your will who you wish to appoint as guardians. By choosing relatives or close friends whom you trust, you avoid uncertainty and dispute.

If you would like us to act as executors and administrators, we'll ensure your estate is administered efficiently and cost-effectively.

Administering someone's will or final wishes
